The city of Troy having been captured by the Greeks, the conquerors, after the first excitement of plunder had abated, began to feel pity for the misfortunes of the vanquished and caused a proclamation to be made that every freeborn citizen should be permitted to take away with him any one thing which he valued the most. Upon this, Aeneas, the Trojan Prince, surrendered everything else to have possession of his household gods. This conduct excited in the minds of the Greeks so high an admiration for his piety that they gave him further leave to take away what he now valued most highly of all the things that remained. Immediately he took upon his shoulders and carried out of the burning town his aged father, who was so infirm as to be unable to escape without assistance. This evidence of filial affection raised still more highly the admiration of the victors, and they allowed him to take everything which he had possessed. They declared that it would be unnatural to them to be enemies to men who gave such proof of piety to the gods and dutiful affection to parents.
